"Aloha 'āina advocacy and kuleana to our communities are major themes in my course. I blend Kanaka Maoli perspectives and contemporary language arts pedagogy in teaching reading, writing, and speaking skills. In doing so, I strive to empower my students to identify their passions, amplify their voices, and use their mana for the greater good."

"These 3 linked classes complement one another in terms of shared learning topics, readings and writing skills and shared assignments. The same group of students take these 3 courses together, simplifying course registration, embeds students within a supportive cohort, and helps to ease social and academic adjustment to college during your freshman year."

#2

HIST 151: World History to 1500 (3 credits)

CRN: 45220

Thursdays 10:30am - 11:45am

Instructor: Liana Horovitz

"In this survey of world cultures (circa 4,000 BCE to 1500 CE) we investigate both the common patterns in human development and the remarkable diversity of human experience. Our learning community, joined with Hawai'i: Center of the Pacific, will focus on our connection to place and identity through an exploration of local and global history. By looking at environmental and geographic influences, a comparison of religion and spirituality in world societies, the impact of empires and the role of trade and migration in the human experience, we strive to understand why, in specific historical conditions and circumstances, human beings behaved in the ways they did -- and how those choices impact our community and our world today. We pay close attention to how the language, stories, and artistic accomplishments of early societies shape the world we live in today. The support and guidance of two teachers and classes working in cohort will support First-Year-Experience (FYE) students in exploring their own educational goals, their connections to the place they live, and our shared human journey."

"This course is designed to introduce students to an extensive range of topics through an indigenous perspective. I aim to guide students in knowing the true history our place and developing a deeper understanding through visual and creative mediums and meaningful discussion and reflection. Truth empowers our students which empowers our greater community."
